Family Service Fee Policy Explained

The fee policy of Family Service was explained when the Inglewood-Hawthorne District Advisory Council met recently in the community room at Crozier school.

Miss Charlotte Gillig of Hawthorne, vice-chairman, conducted the meeting in the absence of Charles Gawthrop, chairman. The fee policy was explained by a panel composed of Miss Catherine Reynolds, district director; Mrs. Virginia P. Feier, case worker; Mrs. O. C. Taylor; and graduate students working with the agency, Miss Friedman and Mrs. Ferguson. The agency, which offers counseling and other services to persons with family problems, such as marital difficulties, child rearing problems, vocational, financial or adjustment problems, has accepted small fees in some cases since 1947.

It is a community chest agency and is supported largely by red feather contributions. However, many clients preferred to pay, at least, in part for the service. Fees, where they were accepted, ranged from $1 to $8 per interview, depending upon the client's income and number of dependents. For a time, the question of fees was brought up by the social worker where conditions warranted it. Again, during an experimental period, fees were never mentioned unless the client himself brought up the matter. And in no case was a fee asked where the client's problem was a financial one.

In all of these experiments, the guiding factor was the client's reaction. It was found that in many instances people who could and wanted to pay accepted the service more readily and benefited more when they felt they were paying for a professional service. The Inglewood-Hawthorne District offices are in the Community Chest Service Center, 331 East Kelso street. Appointments may be made by calling ORegon 8-2920.

Need help in figuring your income tax?

For those having trouble determining how much they should pay Uncle Sam this year, the Camino college is offering a series of three meetings on income tax. The free meetings, open to the general public, will be held Jan. 11, 18 and 25 from 7 to 9 p.m. in Room E-1 on the college campus.

Instructors will be available to help with individual problems and to explain the 1956 income tax schedule. The Camino college is located at Crenshaw and Redondo Beach boulevards.
